Stahlbush

Farming Begins with Family

Bill and Karla Chambers started Stahlbush Island Farms with two crops, a piece of land and a passion for good food. Today, the couple still lives in the same house on the farm and manages the business every day. Some may call that old-fashioned; we call it a family farm.

Sustainable Farming at Stahlbush

Soil Health: With each growing season, we use conservation tillage to reduce erosion. We also plant cover crops to return nitrogen to the soil and build organic matter. We even apply digestate from our biogas plant to our fields as it acts as an organic fertilizer, naturally increases microbial activity and builds overall soil health.

Water Conservation: We continue to improve our irrigation: using weather, soil moisture and evapotranspiration data to track water use and needs. We have implemented automation systems that allow us to access real-time data that automatically controls and schedules our irrigation based on the needs of each plant.

Wildlife Habitat and Biodiversity: We plant native species that attract pollinators like bumblebees. We also plant cover crops in the winter that keep the blue herons on the farm year-round. We have a thriving blue heron rookery or habitat on the farm.

Social Responsibility and Employee Well-Being: We have programs and benefits in place for our employees to ensure job satisfaction and fulfillment. We also strive to improve our local community. For instance, we donate one million servings to local food banks every year.

Innovation: We were the first farm ever to be certified sustainable by the Food Alliance. We have always been early adopters of new technology. Stahlbush was the first farm in Oregon to use GPS technology and the first to build a biogas plant that generates electricity using agricultural by-product in North America.

Left: A photo of purple corn. Corn is a great example of the agricultural by-product that we feed to the biogas plant. For every ear of corn, only 30% is edible. The other 70% is husk and cob.

HARNESSING THE POWER OF PLANTS

In 2009, we built a biogas plant on the main farm to convert agricultural by-product into green energy. Today, all of our fruit, vegetable, grain and legume scraps go to the biogas plant. The electricity that is generated from the process is used to power the processing plant.

ELECTRICITY AND BEYOND!

In addition to electricity, the biogas plant also provides:

STEAM for the boilers.

HOT WATER for sanitation.

HOT AIR to dry our pumpkin seeds.

NATURAL FERTILIZER that nurtures next year's crops.

STAHLBUSH'S VISION

Stahlbush is a real farm, producing real food that exceeds customer expectations with quality, sustainability, innovation and people.

FIELD TO FREEZER

Stahlbush frozen is fresh! Our super sweet corn crop is a prime example of our commitment to flavorful high-quality foods. Super sweet corn is perfectly ripe for three days. We have an unbelievably small window to harvest and freeze the corn kernels before the quality starts to decline. However once we freeze it, the perfect taste, color and nutrition is preserved year-round. If you can't get it from your garden, get it from ours.

SERVING OUR COMMUNITY

We started a tradition long ago to donate our wholesome products to our local community. A few years ago, we set a company goal to donate one million servings annually. Our food donations benefit food banks, school lunch programs, community organizations and activities promoting healthy nutrition.

Fine Food is FINE ART

Below: The backdrop on the farm featuring Mount Jefferson. The Cascade Range and Mary's Peak are prominent in her paintings.

Artist and farmer, Karla S. Chambers co-owns Stahlbush Island Farms with her husband Bill. Like Wendell Berry, the poet-farmer, Chambers makes the connections between culture and agriculture with her celebratory paintings that have been appreciated at prominent galleries across the country. Today, she captures the essence of Stahlbush using the colors of the farm in paintings for each and every label.

A HISTORY OF FOOD SAFETY

In the 1980s, we built our business by supplying ingredients to the two industries with the strictest food safety requirements: baby food companies and the Japanese market. Today, we have a robust food safety program as a result. Our products consistently exceed the industry's toughest food safety standards.

ALLERGEN CONTROL & PREVENTION

We understand the seriousness of food allergies. We have a strict allergen control program in place. Out of the top 8 allergens, we only process wheat, barley, rye and farro. However, a complete cleaning, including a protein swab, is conducted after each run of any items containing gluten to remove any trace or cross-contamination.

ROUTINE PATHOGEN TESTING

Stahlbush continues to increase its spending on pathogen testing, education and training every year. We test routinely for pathogens such as: Listeria, Salmonella and E. Coli
